

Vasylysa Malka Sarah Sheinina (IL)

was born in Kharkiv, Ukraine, during the USSR's collapse, to a single mother who later raised seven children with her new husband.

Influenced by her family of artists, philosophers and engineerings, including her grandfather, a railway innovator and businessman, Malka showed early talents in music, STEM, and languages.

At the age of 21, she moved to Israel to pursue a global entrepreneurship path. To achieve this, she served over a hundred organizations, governments and brands, and earned top degrees from universities in Ukraine, Israel and China.

Now based in Israel with her family, Malka advocates for human potential and leads multiple international adult learner communities to address Future of Work challenges. She also developed a computer program to enhance autodidactic abilities for the digital economy, seeking further investment for global impact. Concerned about the ongoing conflicts in her home countries, Malka is committed to promoting peace and supporting initiatives in female philanthropy, spirituality, climate tech, health tech, and lifelong education.

Surrounded by the love of family across four countries, she remains deeply grateful.
